Slender silver sound,
And the eaves drip
Intermittently,
From the departing snow.

Work Completed Saturday
—Will House Four
Airplanes

The work of pouring the foundation for the new hangar, which is being built by the Alton Flying Service at the Columbia airport, was completed Saturday afternoon.

The hangar, which will be entirely of wood construction, will be located immediately north of the present hangar. According to R. F. Montgomery, pilot for the Alton company, the wood hangar will be much more stable and weather-proof than the metal one now in use.

The old hangar now used by the Alton company will be retained for emergency use, and the plane now at the field and the one on display in the show room of the Alton Automobile Company will be housed in the new hangar as soon as it is completed.

The Hatham Construction Company has the contract for building the new hangar. There is a possibility that the building will be completed by the latter part of this week.
